Each piece is individually made with non-toxic, water-based paints and natural beeswax finish.

87 Raku Pottery by Lee Stead

I love to alter forms by running my fingers along the inside of a pot, or hitting the outside with a stick or a stamp, letting each piece take on its own individuality. My pottery is playful and funky, laced with personality, no pieces being exactly the same. I am currently enjoying the firing processes of raku, as well as gas and wood firing.

88 Kilnformed glass jewellery and vessels

In a process called Kiln Forming I use glass to make the small, glittering vessels I call ToBs (short for "Thing of Beauty"), large freeform vessels I call "Remains", and most recently, sculptural, Jetsons-like, cartoonish, extra terrestrial pieces I call "Treasure Boxes". All my designs are my own creation. I draw much of my artistic inspiration from the colours, textures & patterns of nature around me, particularly from birds, bugs, vegetation, and sea creatures and images of microscopic life-forms such as diatoms.

91 3H Craftworks Nonprofit since 1966

3H Craftworks is a non-profit society. Our objective is to maintain a therapeutic craft program for people unable to work outside the home because of physical or psychiatric disability. Our specialties include nursery and children's accessories and clothing, educational books and felt stories.

92 – (Potting Shed) Gourdgeous Creations

Gourds are classified as hard shelled, non-edible vegetables and I decorate the exterior of them with woodburning, hand carving, stains, dyes, and acrylic paints. The majority of gourds I use have been hand picked by me at a farm located in Southern California. Following the practice of cultures who have used gourds for centuries, I make decorative and functional bowls, lidded vessels, and lamps which spin on their axis to enable the viewer to see all the decoration easily.

93 Elementerra Art Studio

It is the notion of unknown creatures and undiscovered places that I explore in my work. The line of functional pottery, Dimpled Creatures, uses form and surface decoration to reference an amalgamation of creatures from the ocean, the forest, and the desert. It is my intent that each piece has a character that invites the user not only to look at it, but to hold and touch it.

93 Soul Comfort Sheepskin

Wool is a natural fibre and is so versatile that it is used to prevent and treat a wide range of medical conditions such as: bedsores, heart rate, circulation, asthma and arthritis. Healthy professionals, families and the elderly delight in the relaxing, healing energy of wool. They find solace in its natural comfort and tender care. I also make a line of soft foot coverings using just leather – perfect for babies and others with tender feet.

94 Re-cycled Re-claimed Metal Sculpture

My sculpture is what it looks like, reclaimed metal found, bought or donated. Each piece is one of a kind, welded together to create whatever body party they may resemble for the piece being created. All sculptures are made from scratch. They are a lot of fun and I try to add a sense of humor to each one so that their new owners might have a smile when they look at them.

95 That Extra Touch Gourmet Sauces

My husband and I started our little company over 10 years ago. We wanted to get involved in local Farmer's markets. We began creating recipes for gourmet sauces and then searched local farmers for pesticide free ingredients. A great deal of time goes into the creation of each sauce, helping the consumer turn an ordinary meal into an extraordinary meal.
